Don't you see? The Democrat may have some personal objection to the State nominees. If he has, you can't on your own grounds, consistently agrue a moment with him. He may as fairly bolt a whole ticket regularly nominated, as you a part. That is the logic of it.

The Vital Issue of the Election.

Under the head which we use to this article a recent number of the New York Sun has an editorial of more than ordinary thought and merit. It commences ing. turse disturbances has been the unwillingness of political factions, headed by turbulent leaders, to submit quiely to a defeat at the elections," especially those involving a choice of chief magistrates. The fruits of this condition of affairs have been the difficulty, and the growth and prosperity of these countries have been brought to dead stand still. But, if the turbulent and revolutionary elements in our own Southern States. which assume to lead the Democratic party in the impending Presidential contest, are not utterly crushed out by the people in November, our old-time orderly acquiescence in the results of a national election must ere long give way for the introduction of the system that prevails in Mexico and Central and South America. In 1856, the Democratic leaders beyond the Potomac threatened that in the event of the choice of Fremont they would not submit to his administration, but would appeal to the sword. The great majority of our citizens then regarded this as empty gasconade; but when, in 1860, on the election of Lincoln, they attempted to reverse the decision of the ballot-box by a resort to the battle-field, we saw that their declaration of 1856 was no idle threat. The Spanish-American mode of retrieving the loss of a Presidential campaign has been once tried by the Southern Democracy. The experiment has cost the nation seven thousand millions of dollars and one million of lives, and has entailed upon us and our pos-terity a debt of three thousand millions of money, with its necessary accompaniment of remorseless taxation, putting the democratic theory of Government to the severest tests ever en-
